

LONNIE MACK R.I.P. 1941-2016

Guitarist and vocalist Lonnie Mack, known as one of rock's first true guitar heroes - and a major influence on Stevie Ray Vaughan - died on April 21 of natural causes at Centennial Medical Center near his home in Smithville, Tennessee. He was 74. His early instrumental recordings - including "Wham!" and "Memphis" - influenced many of rock's greatest players, including Vaughan, Eric Clapton, Duane Allman, Keith Richards and Jimmy Page. Although the term "blues rock" had not yet come into common usage in 1963, "Memphis" and "Wham!" are now widely regarded as the earliest genuine hit recordings of the virtuoso blues-rock guitar genre.

Thanks to phil_er_up for sharing the show at Dime.
phil_er_up noted:

This is what I remember. We were seated at a table and they were full bodied mics with the back end of mics on the table and used two ashtrays to elevate front of the mics to point toward the stage. Mics basically were pointed at each stack. With Metal tape the high end really comes through and you can hear Lonnie's voice well and his guitar though the cymbals are loud too. Side A of the tape is smoking and, unfortunately, it cuts on Cincinnati Jail. Not much crowd noise. Crowd is way into the show though. Glad I left in all of Lonnie's banter between songs so we can hear his voice.
